ABSTRACT

In a combination contract for each leg or sub-contract, up to two different prices can be selected and allocating the number of products that the multiplier states between the two prices. Allowing each sub-contract to be traded at, at least, two different price ticks within the spread ensures a solution with a correct net price for each combination contract, which can be repeated any number of times (combination quantity).

(Fig. 2)